Dear Orin:

I have just dispatched a message to you instructing you to contact [Redacted] on possible travel restrictions from [Redacted] due to cholera. An article in last night's paper stating that [Redacted] had closed her quarters to people from the [Redacted] area due to cholera prompted me to take this action.

It occurred to me that there might be some possibility that people from the [Redacted] area would not be permitted to enter [Redacted] at this time. If this should be the case, then I think General [Redacted] would probably want to by-pass [Redacted] and proceed direct to [Redacted]. This, of course, would be far from the ideal solution, in that it would mean that the remainder of the survey party would not be able to join him.

If such a situation should develop, however, my suggestion would be that he proceed to [Redacted] alone and make the necessary preliminary arrangements for the survey team to follow as soon as the restriction was lifted. If there are any restrictions, please bring this to his attention as soon as he arrives.

Sincerely,

[Redacted]

Chief, FBIB
